

Ricardo Cordoba / GE Energy

Ricardo Cordoba is the President of GE Energy Western Europe & North Africa. His company is one of the major world providers in energy production. GE Energy works in every industrial energy sector such as oil, gas and sustainable energies. The European offices of the company are located in Belfort, Franche-Comté, and counts more than 1600 employees who design and install power stations everytime cleaner, cheaper and more productive.

In May 2009, the Assembly of European Regions and GE Energy, launched 'European Regions Energy Day', a joint initiative to tackle the energy challenges facing European regions today and to promote possible solutions. It is the first summit to bring together regional decision makers and European energy experts and will be held annually in Brussels, Belgium from the end of April 2010.

The European regions are a key player in the choice of the energy solutions to be implemented in their territories. That is why Michel Sabban and Ricardo Cordoba have joined forces to address climate change issues at a regional European level.

The partnership creates a unique gateway between globally renowned energy experts and regional public decision makers; it also supports the European Union's energy and environment strategy while creating a benchmark centre of expertise and solutions in the energy field for all the European regions.